

With thirty-thousand dead people registered to vote in North Carolina, election officials are especially vigilant these days. That's why 23-year-old Jonathan Cratsley Junior of Vass, has a court appearance scheduled for the 20th of this month. Cratley, a convicted felon, completed and submitted a voter registration application form a month ago. His application caught the eye of elections officials and he was charged with felony voter registration fraud. Convicted felons are prohibited from registering to vote.
